No. 1 "The Fiddlin' Doll"

Broke, the Information Kid, finds some money but almost immediately loses it at craps, while 50-50 Henry, his pal, who has just eaten a big meal on the Kid, has to wash dishes to pay for his repast. The Kid's girl, the Fiddlin' Doll, plays for Rabinsky, a noted violinist, but he tells her she will never amount to anything as a musician. The Doll, disappointed by his verdict, breaks down, and the Kid begs Rabinsky to drop her some little encouragement, but he refuses.

Eager to find a good husband for the Doll, the Kid and Henry make the acquaintance of Larry, an Easterner, whose roll they increase by judicious plunging to several thousand dollars. Ten days of lucky gambling follow, and the joint bankroll has grown to $40,000. Larry proposes to the Doll, but she puts him off.

The trio stake their wad on "Wedding Bell". The horse is left at the post, and the Kid is down to a capitol of thirty cents. The Doll refuses to marry Larry and he returns East. The Kid hears of it and imagines another rival and leaves the Doll in anger. Henry, recognizing the Doll's love for the Kid, puts him wise and tells him to go in and win.
